

WRITING GROUP GUIDELINES

LitArts RI is committed to establishing a safe space to share your creative work. Writing groups meeting in our physical or virtual space must abide by these guidelines, to ensure an open exchange of ideas between all participants.

By joining a writing group you agree to abide by LitArts RI's Terms of Use and:

1. To be respectful of others' work and keep feedback constructive and positive. Sharing creative work can be vulnerable, so be supportive.
2. To refrain from saying anything discriminatory, hateful, or threatening. This is a community space, and these things will not be tolerated. Harassment of any kind is grounds for removal from the writing group and LitArts RI.
3. To abide by the submission guidelines established by your group facilitator and determined by the group

Your group facilitator will provide you with the schedule and format for the group. Please note that some writing groups may have waitlists or request an initial writing submission before joining. We hope you will commit to your group for the long-term support and relationship growth. If you leave the group, please let your facilitator know so they can open the space to someone else.

Writing groups are open to the public, but LitArts RI membership ($10/month; free for Black, Indigenous, or POC Creatives) is suggested. We need your support!
